Gut-focused hypnotherapy protocol for functional gastrointestinal disorders

Background to the Manchester Protocol and rationale:

The intention behind the gut-focused approach to hypnotherapy is to give sufferers of functional gastrointestinal disorders such as Irritable Bowel Syndrome (IBS) a degree of control over the function of their gastrointestinal system in order to improve their symptoms. Consequently, they need to understand how the normal digestive system works and what seems to go wrong in their condition. The depth of knowledge needed varies from patient to patient. Regardless of whether they have IBS (the most common disorder), functional dyspepsia or a functional esophageal disorder, it is important for patients to know that their condition is multifactorial and has multiple mechanisms involved in generating their symptoms, probably at different 'doses' in different individuals. The role of psychological factors in these conditions tends to be exaggerated and this should be put in perspective as many sufferers have been told it is 'all in their head'. Furthermore, some patients will think that the fact that they are being offered hypnotherapy confirms the notion that their condition is 'all psychological'. It is, therefore, important to emphasize that this type of hypnotherapy specifically targets the gastrointestinal system as well as having positive effects on psychological factors, and that is the reason why it is so effective.

The principal symptoms of IBS are abdominal pain, abdominal bloating or distension and an abnormality of bowel function. In addition, many patients suffer from a variety of other, non-colonic symptoms such as; low backache, constant lethargy, chest pain, nausea and bladder symptoms as well as gynecological problems in females. All of these symptoms, both gastrointestinal and non-gastrointestinal can be targeted by hypnosis and it is, therefore, useful for the therapist to know which ones a particular patient finds most bothersome so that suggestions about reducing their severity can be incorporated into hypnosis sessions.

Practical aspects of delivering gut-focused hypnotherapy:

For those readers not familiar with hypnosis it is important to realize that before trying to administer gut-focused hypnotherapy it is essential that a potential therapist has some formal training in hypnosis and that just reading the script detailed below to a patient is not sufficient. Contrary to popular belief it is not necessary for patients to be lying down and a comfortable chair is more than adequate.

Treatment is typically delivered for one hour, at weekly intervals, with the number of sessions somewhat dependent on the severity of the functional gastrointestinal disorder. It is best for the first session to be devoted to education as detailed above and an explanation of what is involved in treatment. This provides an opportunity for the patient and therapist to get to know each other and for any misconceptions about hypnosis, of which there are many, to be dispelled. Furthermore, it is useful to establish what a patient finds relaxing, as what the therapist finds relaxing, for instance lying on a beach or hill walking, may not necessarily be the same for a patient. It is imperative that patients practice the technique and recordings are provided for this purpose. These can be of a session if the patient wishes, but this can be time consuming and a disincentive to practice. Consequently, a brief recording is also provided for the patient and these are individualized rather than generic, so that the patient is effectively taking the therapist home with them. The ultimate aim of treatment must be for the patient to be independent of the therapist once treatment is completed, although we do allow for the occasional 'top up' if a patient is going through a difficult time.

As a guide, we have provided an example of a gut-focused hypnotherapy script for IBS which can be gradually introduced once the patient has become familiar with the hypnotherapeutic process. However, it is important that this is only used as a guide, and the content of hypnotherapy sessions should be adapted to the individual patients symptoms and personal imagery of their condition to improve the chances of a successful outcome. In the example session below, visualization and several metaphors are used. It is useful to have feedback from the patient about which metaphors they find most useful. It has been found that, if asked, many patients have a personal image of their IBS and then this can be modified accordingly. It is common for anyone suffering from abdominal pain to rub their abdomen to try and relieve it or to place a hot water bottle on their abdomen. Consequently, to try and control the pain of IBS we find that asking a patient to put their hand on their abdomen and feel warmth often works well, with the warmth being used to relax the spasm. Imagining the gut as a river and adjusting the flow can be used as a way of controlling bowel function for either constipation or diarrhea. For instance, as a metaphor for diarrhea, picturing their gut as a fast flowing mountain stream with fast running broken water, and changing it to a smooth flowing river in a pleasant green valley. Alternatively, for constipation, imagining their gut as a stagnant slow moving river with lots of bends and removing the bends to make it flow much more easily with lovely clear clean water. Many patients report that bloating can feel like a balloon in the abdomen and this can then be deflated.

The emphasis so far has been on IBS, but other functional gastrointestinal disorders are equally amenable to hypnotherapy although obviously the metaphors need to be changed in order to control the perceived abnormality in the relevant anatomical region. For instance, in functional dyspepsia improving gastric emptying or accommodation, and in non-cardiac chest pain reducing esophageal spasm or sensitivity. For example, gastric emptying might be improved by imagining a slow running sink being improved by widening the plughole. Alternatively, accommodation might be improved by thinking of the stomach wall as being elasticated rather than rigid. With regard to the esophagus if it feels inflamed, the patient can be asked to think of drinking a cool soothing liquid, perhaps white in color or even containing a local anesthetic. The gut can be oversensitive in many patients (hypersensitivity) and strategies to control this can be introduced, such as using a metaphor to block pain signals travelling up the spinal cord to whichever area of the gastrointestinal system is involved in the patient's condition.

The hypnotic repertoire is remarkably simple and limited, with the repetition of key suggestions over and over again being very important. Famous orators often repeat key messages three times in the same sentence and this technique can be used very effectively in hypnotherapy. For instance: 'you are going to get better and better and better' or 'your mind is going to get stronger and stronger and stronger'. The therapist should speak quietly and slowly making the tone of their voice as relaxing as possible. As a session progresses it is often worth emphasizing certain concepts by saying a particular word in a more assertive tone so it takes on greater importance for the patient. For instance: 'your mind can control anything'. Depending on what has emerged at the initial session, it terms of what mechanisms might be involved in symptom generation in a particular patient and their most bothersome symptoms, the sessions can be designed accordingly.

Each session of hypnotherapy finishes with reinforcement of what has gone before and the inclusion of a post hypnotic suggestion that the patient will continue to improve after the session is over and that this will be facilitated by constant practice with the aid of their recording.

Hypnotherapy and pharmacological treatments:

Hypnotherapy should not be regarded as a standalone treatment and if a patient improves on top of what they are already achieving with medication this can still be regarded as a good outcome. As a patient improves during hypnotherapy, they may find that they need less of any 'as required' medication. For instance antidiarrheal may be needed less often or even discontinued but it is not so easy to stop laxatives, although the dose may be reduced. If they are taking an antidepressant for their IBS the patient may ask if they can stop this if they improve. This has to be done under medical supervision and only if the antidepressant is being taken for IBS rather than depression. This is often easier to achieve with a low dose tricyclic antidepressant rather than a selective serotonin reuptake inhibitor.

Close your eyes and let yourself drift off into a lovely relaxed state.

Nice and tranquil, nice and calm, nice and peaceful.

Your whole body relaxing, just going into a deep state of relaxation really tranquil, really calm, really relaxed.

Go as deep as you possibly can. the deeper you go the nicer you feel the nicer you feel the deeper you go every single muscle in your body relaxing just let yourself go deeper and deeper into this nice state where you are going to take control of everything just sit there and go as deep as you possibly can going deeper and deeper and deeper.

As that body of yours becomes exceptionally relaxed so your mind becomes tranquil and calm and peaceful a nice state of harmony between mind and body everything working normally everything as it should be every system working perfectly everything working in harmony so just sit there feeling nice and healthy nice and relaxed, nice and calm and just go deeper and deeper and deeper into this lovely state that is doing you so much good and your mind feels lovely and tranquil and calm and peaceful feel that you've not a care in the world a lovely tranquil calm mind but at the same time that mind is becoming more and more strong, more and more powerful, more and more positive and determined feel that strength being developed in your mind your mind is becoming stronger and stronger and stronger as you tap into all that potential energy in your mind that you haven't used until now feel that strength developing, feel that power developing as you become more and more positive and less and less negative so you can control anything you can cope with anything you can overcome anything nothing is beyond your ability to control feeling confident, strong, in control, secure, feel really well, not a care in the world Now I'd like you to turn that power of your mind towards your tummy. On a count of 3 put a hand on your tummy and feel a lovely warm feeling in your tummy, feel a surge of control coming over your tummy – 1,2,3.

Feel a lovely soothing feeling in your tummy, as your mind takes control of your gut feel every part of your gut being put under the control of your mind no part of your gut can resist the power, the energy of your mind as it gets stronger and stronger and stronger feel your gut responding to the power of your mind you are taking control of your gut rather than your gut controlling you and on a count of 3 put your other hand on your tummy and double that sense of control - 1,2,3.
Feel that control just getting stronger and stronger and stronger feel your gut responding to the power of your mind no pain, no bloating, no discomfort and even your bowel habit is gradually improving day by day week by week month by month you're just going to get better and better and better failure is not on the agenda you are going to get better you are determined to get better nothing is going to stop you from getting better you are thoroughly fed up with this IBS and once and for all you are going to put it behind you so you are absolutely determined to get better nothing is going to get in your way so that for the rest of your life you can be free of this condition and you can enjoy the rest of your life so no pain, no bloating, no discomfort, no trouble with your guts they just work quietly and normally and you can do what you want without it your guts

you won't need to worry about what you eat you won't have to worry about what you can and can't do you'll just be able to do whatever you want to do without your gut being upset because you are taking control of your gut rather than your gut controlling you you are fed up with being a slave to your gut and you are going to turn the tables on your gut and it is going to be a slave to you do what you want it to do and that is just to work nice and normally in harmony with the rest of your body. so just sit there getting better and better and better and feel another nice surge of comfort coming out of your hands as your tummy responds more and more to the power and energy coming from your mind.
feel positive, feel strong, feel in control feel a surge of well-being in your tummy your tummy is going to become a source of pleasure to you instead of a source of misery and discomfort you may suffer set-backs but they are not going to get you down you are not going to let a set-back get you down you'll just shrug it off because you've shown that you can have good spells now you're going to gradually extend those good spells until the good spells exceed the bad spells until they exceed them so much that you only end up having the odd bad spell now and again and even those you will be able to shrug off so sit there, feeling that power getting stronger and stronger and the energy in your mind becoming really, really powerful your gut cannot resist that healing power of your mind
